

Pledges for the New Year

I pledge to live my life to the fullest, without any fears or doubts of any kind, and with love and enthusiasm. My motive in life is to accept heartily the gifts of the universe, and to improve myself in all the walks of life.

This year, I pledge to go on missions that will take me to unimaginable foreign lands, and challenge my body and brain every so often so as to survive.

I pledge to work hard, to be determined, to be aware and conscious, and to be disciplined on all missions.

I pledge to follow the Zen philosophy of learning, and abolish the Confucius philosophy of learning.

I pledge to stay positive all the year around, and with the positivity in my heart and soul, I pledge to light up every house and street with hopes and promises.

I understand that life is not there forever, and so, for as long as I would live, I would remain a fearless character, a person who is only feared when he is not allowed to be fearless.

With hopes and promises, I witness the birth of a new year, a new year which will bring the much required rain of hopes and opportunities on my seeds of hard work and dreams.

With my eyes set on the target, and my soul ever so enthusiastic, I pledge to grow and nurture my spirit of exploration, discovery, and invention, and to work hard for the benefits of others.

I pledge to not simply give up to a problem, but to understand it, learn from it, and to give up to the problem only after it has done me some good.

With my head faced towards the heaven, and my desires, ambitions, and hopes skyrocketed by this event, I welcome the New Year, and pledge to convert it into a never-forgettable memory.
